We rolled out and on down the highway, passing by the police fort with a six-story guard tower and a few random vehicles in its sand-covered parking lot. Otherwise it appeared empty. Just before we merged with the main highway, I glanced to the left and saw the frame of what looked like a U.S. military Humvee, stripped silver and nearly melted into the tarmac of the highway. I found out later from a former Army Ranger medic who had been at the ambush that the level-six fully armored civilian Hummer had been hit by an RPG. The armor would withstand an RPG but not the windows, and that's where the round hit. This was probably an armor-piercing, rocket-propelled grenade with a five-pound shaped warhead that shot a molten jet upon impact, burning through the bulletproof glass and scorching all four men—killing two and severely wounding the others. The molten jet's complete force and heat were contained inside the armored Hummer, with the only exit for the explosion the six-inch-wide grenade entry hole.

The partially melted remnant was a security vehicle for the last convoy that had set out to supply the Iraqis fighting in Fallujah. As the convoy of fifteen or so supply trucks—with three contractor security vehicles and their USMC escort—passed by two villages set back about two hundred yards from the road, an insurgent launched an RPG at the lead Hummer. The consequent explosion stopped the convoy, and security dismounted to help the injured. The other vehicles should have kept moving, escaping the kill zone as quickly as possible, because thirty to forty insurgents then opened up on the halted column with automatic rifle fire. An American security company, EODT, had some well-trained ex-military troopers; and they gave as good as they got, if not better. Plenty of targets had been running along the roof line of the villages shooting at the supply trucks; but a marine major who happened to be with the escort unit kept shouting, “Don't shoot! Don't shoot! You might hit civilians!”—as if anyone in the middle of a preplanned ambush was an innocent bystander. What was left of an armored car on the side of the road, destroyed in that ambush, ran the subcontractors off and was the reason why no one was supplying EFIC.

I didn't have time to think about all that, as we zipped along the empty highway, but I knew there had to be a better way. I didn't want to end up like the EODT Hummer.

The firefighter worked in 24-hour shifts. Every time he was dispatched to a call that involved a baby or a little boy, Lt. John Watt would get on the phone afterward and ask his wife, Connie, to put their newborn son on the phone. If the baby was sleeping, John would ask Connie to wake him up. He just needed to hear his child laugh, cry or even breathe so he could feel better and finish his shift. The request did not always go over well with a sleep-deprived new mother, but she'd dutifully wake the boy and press the phone to his face.

Even then, the ritual seemed ridiculous. How can you worry about a Mack Truck? Long before J.J. Watt was destroying quarterbacks, before his leviathan arms were slapping down passes and redefining what a defensive lineman can do, he was wreaking havoc on Connie. He grew so big in

A white t-shirt with a handwritten message and a child's footprint. The message is written in blue ink and reads: "Mason Finley VanBuren", "We love you so much and we will never forget you!", "Love, Mommy, Daddy", and "and big brother Ethan". There is a large blue footprint on the left side of the shirt. The shirt has a white button at the top center.

David,

Congratulations on your new speaking position.

I'm proud that you are helping keep Mason's memory alive. I couldn't bear the thought of him
ever being forgotten.

Maybe his effect on
you will help other people in pain through your speeches. Love, Honey

The background is a painting of a tree with a nest. The nest is made of twigs and is situated in a fork of the tree. Inside the nest, there are three blue eggs. The tree's trunk is thick and textured, and the leaves are green. The sky is a pale blue. The title 'The Baby Robin' is written in a blue, cursive font across the middle of the image. The author's name 'Written by Teresa K. Powers' is written in a yellow, sans-serif font at the bottom.
